Jakarta Composite Index

JCI is still moving within a bearish channel and is below the MA10, MA20, and MA50, which indicates that the short-to-medium-term trend is still weakening. Interestingly, however, the RSI indicator is forming a positive divergence, which occurs when the index records a lower low but the RSI does not follow with a lower low. This condition often serves as a signal that selling pressure is starting to weaken and the opportunity for a rebound is beginning to open up.

Historically, a similar pattern also occurred during the lowest JCI in 2025, when the RSI divergence appeared in a strong support area and 1-2 days later JCI experienced a quite aggressive rebound. Currently, JCI is once again approaching that crucial area, making it worth monitoring as a potential reversal zone. As long as JCI is able to hold above the support area of 5,882 – 5,842, the opportunity for a technical rebound remains open. However, if that support is broken, the risk of further weakening still needs to be anticipated. Conversely, a breakout above the 6,210 – 6,230 area could serve as an initial confirmation of strengthening toward 6,550 – 6,600.
