Jakarta Composite Index

JCI continued its weakening and briefly touched its lowest level at 5,644, while simultaneously testing the long-term trendline support before eventually rebounding and closing at 5,839. Despite the emergence of buying action in that support area, JCI is still moving within a bearish channel and remains below the MA10 (6,181), MA20 (6,454), and MA50 (6,956), so the short-to-medium-term trend still tends to be bearish.

On the other hand, the RSI (21) indicator, which is in the oversold territory, is starting to form a positive divergence, which occurs when JCI records a new lower low but the RSI does not follow by forming a lower low. This condition indicates that selling pressure is beginning to subside and opens up the opportunity for a technical rebound in the short term. As long as JCI is able to hold above the 5,644 – 5,600 area, the opportunity for strengthening toward 6,000 – 6,050 up to 6,181 – 6,230 remains open. However, if the 5,644 level is broken again, the risk of weakening toward the 5,500 area needs to be anticipated.

ADVISE: WAIT & SEE; Buy on weakness.
